of nine infantry battalions, two regiments of hussars, two field artillery regiments, one garrison artillery regiment and a battalion of the army service corps.

To the south of the Russian line of advance, on the left wing of the Russian army, lies Posen, a strongly fortified edity, formerly part of Poland, which is accupied by a garrison whose composition is unknown, but whose strength is believed to be very great. Retween Danaig and Posen, on an uneven line, lie the two fortresses of Bromberg, with six infantry battalions, one mounted grandier regiments, and Grandens, which has nine infantry battalions, a regiment of mounted rifles, two field artillery regiments, and Grandens, which has nine infantry battalions, a regiment of mounted rifles, two field artillery. These are the keys of the second line of defensive works. Other small fortified places on the line of advance are Marienburg, with a small garrison of artillery, which the Frenchmen were do in the deck of the first of the deck of the first in importance is Konnighers, on the Gulf of Danig. "I Telephone Every Hour"

SUCCESSFUL salesman recently A said: "I make it a practice to telephone headquarters once every hour during the day."

"By keeping in such close touch with the office, I am always informed of the latest developments. I get quicker action on the orders I secure, and I am able to give my customers better service.

"Since I have followed this plan I have landed more business than ever before, and the telephone helped me get it."
